Oleksandr Baron and the auction conception

Oleksandr Baron is a Ukrainian ethno photographer, co-founder and editor-in-chief of the anti-propaganda informational project "Bessarabian Front", a member of the National Union of Journalists of Ukraine. He is a member of the POWERFilm Production team and is the Internal Communications Director of the OKO International Ethnographic Film Festival. He has been working in the field of cinematography - he participated in the creation of the documentary about the village of Krynychnoye (Chushmeliy) "The Place of Power" and the documentary series "Vanishing Villages", filmed for the Ukrainian public television UA, as well as the documentary film "She".

Oleksandr Baron is a son of Ukrainian Bessarabia, ethnic Bulgarian. He was born in the village of Vessela Dolina, Bolgrad district, Odessa region on 13. 01. 1977. He lives in the town of Odessa. He has dedicated himself to the cause of preserving cultural heritage by photographing Ukrainian traditions. He became interested in ethnographic photography in 2017, when he attended a folklore festival in the Republic of Bulgaria for the first time. His first photo exhibition took place in 2018 in Balchik, Bulgaria. He had 15 individual exhibitions held in Ukraine and Bulgaria. His works cover the following main themes: the Bulgarian in me, the Bulgarian spirit in Ukrainian Bessarabia, the diversity of cultures and identities of the people of Ukraine, ethnographic cinema.

After the beginning of the full-scale war of the Russian Federation against Ukraine, when terror affects every Ukrainian on a daily basis, the topic of war also becomes of interest. Unlike most war photographers, he works not so much on the front line, but in the back. Baron continues his experience from ethno photography by capturing the impact of military terror on the everyday person's life and world, on civilians in towns and villages, subjected daily to drone, ballistic and cruise missile attacks for a year and a half already.

The title of the auction "The People of Ukraine through Peace and War" indicates, on the one hand, the artist's permanent interest in the life and world of the common people, as well as the theme of the ethnic diversity of the traditional cultures of Ukraine. On the other hand, the title points to the author's specific view, expressed visually in his photographs, of going through war as an obstacle to be overcome, rather than immersing oneself in war as in a sea in which one can remain at the bottom.

The special aspect of his insight that attracted me, and for which I think it is valuable his art to be exhibited, is his talent for finding and extracting beauty from scenes of absolute horror, from scenes of destruction. He does it not because he finds the war destruction beautiful, no. He does it because his internal world cannot accept and come to terms with this total horror of the war in the external world - the savage destruction of civilization. Already on the spot, while looking at the object, his lens searches for and very often finds a way out. With his compositions and frames, Baron constantly demonstrates that there is a way out of the nightmare of savagery's war with civilization, and that the way out is even here close by, right next to where the rocket exploded. Civilization has something to be born again from.

The elements of beauty in the ruins not only provide a model for a way out for the civilization being destroyed by the rashist savagery, but also have a therapeutic impact - both for the author and for us, the viewers. All Ukrainians today are deeply traumatized and need healing of their terrible traumas. Although to an incomparably lesser degree, we (who are watching from the sidelines) are also traumatized, because we know that it could have happened to us, and if the Ukrainians do not stand their ground - it may happen to us. Baron's photographs heal both Ukrainian and our wounds and fears from the war.¹

New Bulgarian University, member of Bulgarian-European Cultural Dialogue Centre

¹ Personally, I have not yet dealt with the first trauma - that in my life, at this moment, there is a war going on in Europe. As I write this, I cannot rid myself of the feeling that I am having a surreal dream – that I am curating an auction of war photographs by a contemporary artist, a Ukrainian-Bulgarian. After finishing the text, I read about the latest missile strike on Baron's city, Odessa.
